Around 2 million people in Europe suffer from IBD. Crohn's Disease (CD) and Ulcerative Colitis (UC) are incurable serious chronic diseases of the intestinal tract. The symptoms are distressing, embarrassing and even debilitating. Once symptoms appear, they resemble those of other conditions of functional origin (IBS), which make it very difficult for doctors to correctly diagnose. IBS is often confused with Ulcerative Colitis and Crohn Disease. The inflammation typical of these diseases is not present in IBS. It is assumed that IBS affects over 30 million people in Europe and results in over 2 million yearly visits to physicians. Twenty to 30 percent of all visits to gastro enterologists are due to symptoms of IBS. Calprotectin is a clear gatekeeper marker for the physicians timely decision making on whether to send the patients to colonoscopy or to treat them for IBS symptoms.
